COORDINATOR / DO NOT INCLUDE THE SEALED KEY

A simple morning review session

Prepare once. Let both cooks work independently. Collect their original answers.

Before you book the session

The frozen 150-case sample exists, but the real populated reviewer packs are not ready yet. Do not collect ratings from random recipes, synthetic examples, or an empty demo. We must provide two separate personal packs, their exact candidate counts, and an agreed return route first.

Give each person only three things

- Their own R1 or R2 review pack with the actual recipe context and blinded suggestions.
- The one-page English reviewer quick guide.
- A private return route and your contact for missing-context or access problems.

What the standalone pack must do

Open without developer tools or workspace access. Show one recipe at a time, clear A/C/N/U choices, optional notes, progress and unanswered items. Preserve identifiers automatically; save and resume without losing answers. Export one complete original response file. No model names, ranks, gold/reference markers, strata, other reviewer's answers, or sealed mapping key.

Budget a morning from observed pace

Both people review the same 150 sampled cases, not 75 each. The first version uses up to five suggestions plus a recorded reference, deduplicated and shuffled: at most 900 judgments per reviewer. Exact counts are not yet known. Let each person complete the first five real cases independently, then estimate the remaining time from their own pace. Keep those answers; do not change the rubric or cherry-pick cases after seeing them.

A realistic timing check

At 1 minute per case, 150 cases take about 2.5 hours; at 2 minutes, about 5 hours, before breaks. These are arithmetic scenarios, not measured estimates. If a morning is too short, resume later with the same frozen pack rather than rushing, dropping cases, or dividing the sample between reviewers.

Collect and retain

- R1's untouched original export and any accompanying notes.
- R2's untouched original export and any accompanying notes.
- The exact pack versions, dates, unfinished/withdrawn items, and a short pseudonymous description of relevant cooking experience.
- Separate disagreement adjudication afterwards, under the agreed procedure. Never overwrite either original review.

Keep private records private

Keep identities and consent records internally as agreed. Use R1/R2 in returned review artifacts; do not send us confidential permission emails or consent forms. Use the agreed private route, not public Git or a public survey link. These ratings concern culinary substitutions, not clinical or allergy safety.
